Dedication

...A Tale of Woe, Triumph and Devotion

When yearbook dedication is discussed, dedication is the deciding factor. The events of the past school year have aptly proved Larry Anning's dedication both to the school and to us. But, as though to confirm what we had already planned, Larry's performance during the great Christmas Week Freeze solidly reinforced our decision to honor him. He has been a friend to us all; a gentle nurturer of students, furnace, teachers, plumbing, staff...and of the trees he loves.

Our respect, friendship and love are heartily extended to Larry Anning.

The Weathervane Staff

nce upon a time, there was a wonderful school for princesses in a far off kingdom called Batavia, New York. Some of the most beautiful, intelligent princesses came from another kingdom...one made primarily of glass. This kingdom was called Toledo and the fathers of the Toledo princesses thought it would be a good idea if the wonderful school could be moved to their kingdom so that they could spend more time admiring their beautiful daughters and their beautiful daughters could spend more time at home and less on the train. So it came to pass that, one hundred years ago (in 1884), the wonderful school moved to Toledo.

The Smead sisters, who headed the school, moved along with the students and all of the faculty. In September, the school opened its doors to 35 day students and eight boarders. In addition to Misses Marian, Mary and Caroline Smead, there were five other faculty members and together they taught English literature, history, grammar, American history (which, of course was a bit easier then, as there wasn't nearly so much of it), geography, science, mathematics, drawing, piano, French, German, and Latin.

The school flourished on Hough Place (North Summit Street) for another three years; then, as the Smead School, moved to Fitch Estate, where it remained for 46 years.

One of the more difficult early years for the school came in 1889, when Miss Marion Smead died of pneumonia. Also in that year, a large number of the beautiful princesses fell victim to scarlet fever. Despite the hardships, the school continued to grow strong, and in 1907 boasted an enrollment of 93.

That year, 100 former students formed the Smead School Association at a reunion in the Smead home. Mary Smead was elected the first president of this august body, and she asked that the annual meeting be held on May 15, the anniversary of her late sister Marian's birth. Her wish has been honored lo, these many years; the annual alumni meeting is still held on or near that date.

Meanwhile, the beautiful princesses studied hard. In addition to the curriculum, the princesses frequently took a bit of fresh air during orderly walks around the neighborhood. There were no athletics at the school then, nor were there any extracurricular activities; the idea being, one would suppose, that princesses should concentrate primarily on becoming queens and not bother much about becoming anything else.

But, in 1909, this idea began to change and the Smead School was accredited by the North Central Association of College and Secondary Schools. Also in that year, the school property was purchased by one Noah Swayne, who promptly offered to give it to the school, providing $20,000 could be raised for endowment.

The Highly Regarded Smead Sisters retired in 1911, and the helm was taken over by Misses Rose and Elsie Grace Anderson, former Smead School teachers. A board of trustees was elected that year, with Emery D. Potter as its president. The school became a non-profit corporation, and the princesses benefited greatly from their superior education.

They were beginning to broaden their horizons quite nicely in other ways, too. Out of doors plays were presented, with beautiful princesses acting out such classics as Wooing and Witches (1918 and 1923), Mid-Summer Nights' Dream, and Love's Labor Lost. The outdoor graduations became more befitting the princesses, with the maidens decorously attired in delicately flowing white frocks.

Donned in dark blue or white middy blouses, and one piece jumpers, the princesses were, by 1924, encouraged to participate in athletics. The idea that even the elegant forms of princesses could be improved upon with a bit of exercise was furthered through the establishment of the Athletic Association.

"Resident Pupils" were still accepted during the Anderson administration, with each day's activities well supervised. Properly chaperoned princesses could leave school only infrequently and for their regular vacations, with home visits limited to one or two per term. Evening outings were discouraged, except for the occasional concert or lecture. "Boxes of candy and food" were forbidden booty and shopping excursions were frowned upon, the thought being that the well-bred princess came to the school fully prepared for the entire term. Laundry was limited to fifteen pieces per week per princess.

Lunch was served to non-resident princesses for $3 or $4 a week, but most princesses walked home for lunch...or were called for and returned by the family chauffeur.

In 1928, the Andersons retired, and the countryside was scoured for a suitable replacement. Miss Leslie Leland, from the distant kingdom of Buffalo, New York, was selected. A firm believer in the benefits of fresh air for the development of young minds, Miss Leland also encouraged her charges to take the college entrance examination, providing, of course, that they maintained a course average of 90% or better.

That the school...and the princesses...might be even further improved upon, Miss Leland proposed that the school move to the country for more fresh air and sunshine. She also suggested that princes be admitted as well. Nothing stirs up princesses and princes so well as a coeducational school. Despite the economic depression of the times, the board of trustees was successful in raising the necessary capital to purchase a "rolling, wooded area on Reynolds Road, where many a Toledo family had picnicked and dreamed of building a future home on a back knoll near the dogwood grove." Construction was begun on the new school, which would offer the "advantages of boarding school without breaking family ties."

On September 17, 1934, the school opened its doors with a new name, Maumee Valley Country Day School, and some princes, who were admitted only to lower grades. Janes-Franklin School, a prep school for princes, was absorbed by MVCDS, thereby providing some of the new students.

Buses carried many of the students to and from home, although, even in the late '30's, there were still some family chauffeurs performing that task.

Willis Stork, who was headmaster from 1938 until 1955 (with a brief respite during his tour of active duty in the '40's, when Rev. Malcom Ward did the honors), and James Henderson, 1955-60, did much to make the school more visible in the kingdom, and enrollment tripped. Of course, the new electric scoreboard for athletic events (installed in 1950) might have been a deciding factor, too, but mostly it is believed that superior educational standards encouraged people to send their offspring to Maumee Valley Country Day School.

The handsome scoreboard recorded the stellar athletic achievements of the "Mohawks" who were propelled to victory by those winsome cheerleaders, the "Minihawks".

In 1955, an additional 28 acres was donated to the school, and with an even larger part of the kingdom within its moat, a high school building was proposed. Dedicated on December 20, 1959, the handsome structure boasted new classrooms, science rooms, faculty offices, a library, dining hall, and gym, while outside, athletic fields dotted the landscape.

All through the '40's and '50's, fabulous events had taken place for the princes and princesses of the school, which had given it a rich and colorful history. Dramatic events abounded, clubs and service organizations flourished and the school had become a source of pride in the kingdom. These sterling aspects of education at Maumee Valley Country Day School continued to prosper in the new high school. So, when the construction of a new lower school was proposed, all of the subjects in the kingdom rejoiced. The lower school opened its doors in 1971, and through them walked five members of the class of 1984, about whom you may read in a later tale.

As you can see, this school is an exceptional school, which gives everyone connected with it a great sense of the importance of the past as well as an eagle eye to the boundless opportunities of the future. To see how the current crop of princes and princesses, ladies-in-waiting and knights are responding to the challenges of a century of tradition and the commencement of the next hundred years, settle back and enjoy the remaining Tales to Take With You.

Maumee Valley Wakes Up ...a Faculty Tale

It is 6:30 a.m. Monday. The sun is rising along with 55 women and 25 men. Four of them have been up since 5 a.m.!

Some of these very special 80 people wake up to the sounds of their young children, while most wake to the sound of music or alarms.

The first thing many of these people do in the morning is go to the bathroom. A few light up a cigarette, while one sits on the side of her bed and praises the Lord Almighty, thanking Him for the day.

Most of them shower in the morning, preferably with warm water. Few exercise in the morning, although one runs for two hours. (He keeps the rest of them in shape!)

Fewer than half of the men take vitamins, while more than half the women do. (A lot of vitamin C!) Most of the men and women wear watches to keep in time.

All but six of this group drink coffee or tea (only 12 prefer tea to coffee). Only 34 of them, mostly women, eat what they consider to be a good breakfast. Most simply have juice and coffee. A few add a piece of toast to that.

As a group, they do not floss regularly every morning, but rather occasionally—on the way to the dentist.

These 55 women and 25 men have a total of 135 children. They also have a lot of pets: 28 cats, 39 dogs, 8 fish (mostly gold), and a few gerbils, birds and rabbits. Most of them have two children, but two of these folks have seven kids! Five of them are married to five others in this group.

When these people leave home, they leave behind their children, sitters, wives, animals, husbands, nephews, plants, "Duke", roommates and messy houses. One person leaves a husband home because that's where his office is.

Most of them pack their own lunches consisting of sandwiches and fruit, and a lot of yogurt! Three people don't eat any lunch at all.

Most of them come to school by car. However, one drives a school bus, two take TARTA, one jogs, one rides a bike, and in good weather there is a little yellow Moped that arrives carrying one member of this team. Together, they travel a total of 608 miles to work.

The first person arrives at work at 7:15. By 7:45, the nursery is getting busy and by 8:00 coffee is perking in three different spots. An estimated 60 cups of coffee are consumed between 8:00 a.m.—8:30 a.m.

Most of these people carry two to three bags to work with them, including diaper bags, lunch bags, WGTE bags, book bags, L.L. Bean bags and bags under the eyes!

One man carries his briefcase and sometimes his dog (on a leash). This man is the leader of all the others.

At 8:30, these people are: kissing kids goodbye, greeting kids, filling the bus with gas, taking attendance, turning on ovens, changing a diaper, reading mail, taking a shower, arriving at school (late!), silent reading, and teaching.

The faculty and staff at Maumee Valley Country Day School are there to help us, the students, learn and live greater lives. We are very happy for that.

A Creative Adventure ...a Senior Tale

any months ago, in a kingdom far across a broad river, there lived a lovely Fairy Scribe, who was beautiful beyond words, gracious, charming, and clever enough to weave this rather flattering description of herself effortlessly into the first paragraph of this tale. She had an equally beautiful cousin across the river who toiled away as a librarian in a splendid school. One day, the Library Nymph said to the Fairy Scribe, "O, Cousin, I have a plan which will make us neither rich nor famous, but which will allow us to have fun, be creative, and perhaps drink a bit of elderly grape juice together. I am the yearbook advisor at my splendid school, and wish to call upon you to help write charming tales to introduce the sections of the book. Will you?...oh, will you??"

The Fairy Scribe agreed, rather liking the whole idea (especially the part about the elderly grape juice), and so the writing began. Information was given, suggestions were made, and the word processor spewed fairy dust all over the pages. The work was fun, the cousins were delighted and contentment reigned on both sides of the river.

Until...one day...a SNAG!

The Library Nymph asked many of the seniors in the school for glowing accounts of their memorable final year. She wished the Senior Tale to be special, as, after all, never again (with luck) would their faces grace a high school yearbook. The Library Nymph desired that this should be a meaningful tale...a shining bit of literary memorabilia...a Tale to Take with Them. But, alas, the poor nymph met with vague, incoherent responses. After much effort, many questions, and much time, she brought a tiny scrap of paper to the Fairy Scribe.

"Oh, eye of newt and toe of frog," said the Fairy Scribe, scanning the wee paper and turning rather ugly. "How am I to weave a tale around this? Why, there is practically no information at all! Look at this: 'When they were sophomores, the class of '84 went to Cedar Point'. Or this: 'Five Senior boys went through the whole school together from the beginning.' 'This is the first class to begin in the new building.' Arrgghhh! What fascinating prose can I call forth to make that interesting?" Here she paused to tear at her abundant chestnut curls.

"Well, at least they blushed when telling me about 'Stealing the Swan at Stratford' and they snickered when someone mentioned 'The emergency room at Stratford'. But, alas, they would tell me no more," sighed the exhausted Library Nymph.

"But what, oh, what am I to do?" wailed the Fairy Scribe, "I need details! Was the swan injured during the theft? Killed? Did it wreak havoc upon the perpetrators, making the hospital visit a necessity? There is a story here; I can feel it! Get more information!"

By now, however, time had run short; the deadline was upon them. So the Library Nymph and the Fairy Scribe had to trust that the following pages would tell everyone in the kingdom all they wanted—or cared—to know about the Maumee Valley Country Day School class of 1984.

I'd like to thank my entire family. Without you, none of this would be possible.

That chap is really out of control today.

Thank you for you're support: Mr. Russell, Mrs. Morrow, Mrs. Bissonette, and Albert Getman. I'd also like to thank the members of this incredible Klan: Christie Hamilton, Bill Morley, Ronnie Simmons, Kelly Light, Brad Coffin, Peter Detgen, Bill Stewart, Stephen Foser, Jessica Bashaw and the "V" Man.

I've never been known for being at a loss for words, so why ruin my image now?

Mom: How can I ever thank you enough? for life? for love? Maybe I haven't said it often enough but I sure do appreciate all you've done for me and I love you!

Thanks to those teachers who believed in me because you made the work worthwhile: Mrs. Morrow, Mr. Euton, David, Mrs. Schwartz and especially Charles Lundholm (I'm privileged to be one of the few who know your middle name). "A chief event in life is the day in which we have encountered a mind that startled us." Ralph W. Emerson.

The true friends... the lasting friends... are the ones who know us for what we are, yet don't try to change us... thanks... for being those kinds of friends.

Shawn: You have the best gift anyone could have — the ability to make us all laugh. Thanks for all those times we did and didn't. Remember: "I was the bride of an orange poncho."

Seksom: A good friend since and till forever. We've had some good talks and I'll never forget the bet!

Angela: Thanks for being so good to me. I love ya' babe! Remember stealing the street sign, the brother syndrome, and a million more great memories.

Kris: My bestest friend always, for all the love and those "four in the morning spill out our guts" discussions — thanks. "There is no need for an outpouring of words to explain oneself to a friend. Friends understand each other's thoughts even before they are spoken." S.P.J. My favorite four o'clock quote, "They only wish they were good!"

Michelle: My favorite person to talk with, because neither of us ever stop. You've really helped me. "Listen, there's a hell of a good universe next door, let's go."

To my favorite brothers: Rod and Ryan. I've enjoyed every second I've spent with each of you. I'll always love you both.

To my father (1932-1970): I often lay awake at night... wishing you were here. There's been so much I've wanted you to be a part of, so many things I've done with my life, I hope you would be proud. And I cry.

Tracey and Shawn: spyin' on M.D.M. in our 3-D glasses.

Heather: our authentic Stratford swan!

The Awesome High School

...an Educational Tale

here was once a high school so splendidly original that everyone noticed it, even though it was, when compared with other schools, quite tiny. Like The Mouse that Roared, it was a grand little power among the others. The proof of this fact was that when they became adults, many of the students became influential leaders in the great work of the world. But because it was small, sometimes the students felt lost in the panorama of high schools in the kingdom wherein the little high school was located.

"We will be unique!" shouted the students of the little high school. "We will be so 'in' that the other schools will all be left far behind! Perhaps we are small, but we will be powerful!" So the students looked at themselves. "We must look especially grand. That is the first step," they all declared. Everyone began to notice their clothes. Small reptiles were seen on nearly every chest, like badges.

"This will not do! Everywhere one looks, one notices these wee reptiles. We must rise above the common fixation with cold blooded animals!" the most fashion conscious declared. A small army of polo players was dispatched to vanquish the dreaded alligators. "Ah, much better," sighed the students.

"Oh, no," cried the students, "look at the legs of our females! They are all covered in leg warmers...but (gasp) leg warmers are now even available in super markets! They are common! Everyone is wearing them. This will not do." So all of the leg warmers were relegated to those studying dance, and the female students instead covered their limbs with decorative stockings of every pattern and hue. "That's more like it," the students said, "Now we are once again above the crowd."

But before the students could relax, someone noticed that many people—nearly everyone, in fact—wore gloves with fingers in them! "Horrors!" gasped the students. "We must rise above this trend." So someone, on a trip to a larger kingdom, found gloves without fingers. "Ah, wonderful," breathed the students. "We will all wear these fabulously different gloves and be, therefore, unique."

"Wait just a minute," said a voice of reason. "I don't like these new gloves without fingers. My fingers are freezing, and besides, the new gloves cost more than gloves with fingers. This is dumb." The others turned to stare at the maverick. The Voice of Reason continued, "We are special without fingerless gloves, spotted legs and polo players running across our chests. We have a really wonderful school, where we get to do really wonderful things. Take Winterim, for example...some of us got to go skiing and learn to watercolor, others of us went to the Bahamas, one of us worked in an art studio...that's remarkably splendid. Besides, each of us is encouraged to be our best. That is uncommon enough for anyone, because each of us is unique."

The students thought about this, and concluded that the Voice of Reason was correct. So, although they still continued to fall into the fashionable pit from time to time, they all sought to remember that high school is a place to discover who one is, how high one can soar and how happy and fulfilled one can be.

JACK'S

Every fall marks a time that all people should know, for when the frost lay on the ground,
to the hunting cabin we go.

It's a rustic place of many years,
with deer heads on the wall,
plenty on pouring beer,
and jokes that come from all.

It's a place where a man can go for a week, in the same underbritches.
He can spit where he wants, talk when he feels and scratch himself where he itches.

There's an open hearth in the corner, and a leather couch for look,
while gun talk runs hot and slick,
Rick's has been drafted as cook.

While we grow old and our bones weary and as the cabin topples,
I'll always remember of that place as our palace in the popple.

The little joys of teaching are without number

Alone I sit
With thoughts of peace
Silence fills my breath
Disrupted only by the sunlight
In its narrow path

Why must there be
Those thoughts of war
Hatred without cause
While loving does not kill or injure
Hatred often does

Alone again
Myself at peace
Solitary songs
The men who hate and kill outnumber
Those of love and joy

100 Acre Wood ...a Lower School Tale

innie the Pooh had it right, the Lower School Meadow is a "100 Aker Wood". It is always good to have a Pooh Bear around to make the world clear and understandable and to hold your hand if you're feeling a little insecure, as I was on this occasion.

We stood in the center of the Great Meadow on a woody outcropping, gazing at the entire 100 akers, enjoying the colors streaming by us and wondering at the variety of species that inhabit its perimeter. In the meadow itself were all manner of young critters, chatting, reading, listening and in general enjoying the close and fuzzy presence of one another.

To our immediate west lies the spot Pooh Bear called "The Thicket of Production". "Well named", I thought, for it was an area abounding with otter pups who formed a grand creche of melodic cacophony, all expertly orchestrated by the adults of the species. The joyful sounds signalled the day's lessons in the survival skills specific to this furry cutie. Although happily engaged in their sliding lesson, it was apparent that the young pups were well behaved and generally disposed to mind their elders. Just watching the adult otters tired us for they never seemed to rest, nor could they, for the pups themselves seemed incapable of staying in one spot for more than a moment.

A short distance to the north of the otters is the Forest of Festivals, inhabited, we could see, by wonderously nimble short-tailed ruminant kids who pranced about on small cleft hooves. From our perspective they seemed to be clothed in Grecian, or was it Egyptian, costumes? Pooh wasn't sure, but he did say it was always one or the other. Thereupon he directed my attention to the faun-like animals who were shepherding the kids from task to task. The fauns are delightful creatures and courageous as well for taking on this herd of cultural revellers.

The next area we entered Pooh called the "Beaver Bush", a stand of trees and numerous ponds around which small clumps of furry amphibians busily engaged in reducing a forest of impressions into manageable sticks of knowledge. The little kits are a happy industrious lot whose seriousness of purpose is periodically overwhelmed by the spirit of playfulness so natural to their age. It was plain to us that it requires all the energy of the adults and occasional slaps of their broad flat tails upon the surface of the water to keep the kits in line. As you can imagine, the energetic involvement of teeth and tails give this area a markedly distinctive auditory character.

The remaining patch of trees was densely populated with young deer who gambolled and capered about as if their legs were newly found. When we crept in close it became apparent to us that the yearlings spent much time "oohing" and "ahhing" over their newly discovered antlers, freshly grown coats or disappearing spots. Pooh Bear explained that it is always this way with mammalents. What ever the case, it was apparent that the buck and several doe in charge worked hard in a valiant effort to keep the minds of the yearlings on the higher more sublime principles of the forest. I wonder if they ever succeed?

As Pooh Bear led me out of the Great Meadow, I tried to find a way to sum up our experience, unfortunately, my mind turned to jello and all thought failed me. However, Winnie the Pooh reminded me it was getting on toward supper time and because his stomach and brain are directly linked, he found just the right words. He whispered in my ear, "These animals here love learning and life as a bear friend of mine loves a jar of honey." I knew what he meant and agreed with him. Don't you?

Centennial

MVCDS Relives Century Of School Days

By MOLLY SCHIEVER BEHRMANN
Staff Writer

THE SCHOOLROOM looked a little forbidding. Wooden benches and wooden desks are lined up before the teacher's stand. There aren't many books and not much equipment or extra aids.

The children, whose brightly lit, large classroom area is in stark contrast to the little room set up to the side, can see what school days must have been like 100 years ago.

"I think I'd get a cramp," Katie Hanna, 9, says with a giggle.

Katie and the other 284 children who attend Maumee Valley Country Day School's lower school were celebrating the past.

Their school is 100 years old this year and the children played time travelers for one week. They played with old toys, studied old clothes and found out what their city looked like in 1884.

Maumee Valley first was known as the Maumee Street School for Girls. It opened its doors on North Summit Street in September, 1884.

THROUGH the years, the focus and organization changed, as it went from a boarding school, to the first fully accredited Toledo school, to a co-educational school with classes from pre-primary grades through high school.

In 1934, the name was changed to Maumee Valley Country Day School and the location moved to Reynolds Road.

Centennial Week's activities, planned also as an introduction to the school's annual antique show which will be held Jan. 28-29, gave the pupils a chance to see craftsmen spinning and weaving, working with copper and making baskets.

Susan Gangwere, of the Henry Ford Museum and Greenfield Village in Dearborn, Mich., came to talk about life 100 years ago. Her dress was blue and white and long, the kind of clothing Katie Hanna decided she would not have liked.

Mark Yoshowitz, 9, agreed. "The styles were weird," he said. "The boots were real high — up to your knees — and had all these laces and ties on them."

MANY items the children studied were lent to the school by the Maumee Valley Historical Society and the Sander Farm and Craft Village, in Archbold, O. Sharon Hanna, Centennial Week co-chairman with Grace Brown, said.

A Perryburg store, New To You, lent antique clothing for a special style show. Mrs. Hanna said there was one unexpected result.

"The seventh and eighth graders modeled the clothing, which was originally worn by adults. But several of the dresses were too small for even the slimmest girls to button up."

The children were asked to bring in something from their families that was about 100 years old.

Teachers Mary Anne Winney and Laszlo Koltay model old-time swim suits.

Susan Gangwere, of Greenfield Village, shares an old school book with first-grader Amy Korn.

Jesse Carino, Nikki Turner play teacher and dunce.

Sporting and Cavorting ...an Athletic Tale

In a magic kingdom far away, there was once a wonderful queen, who cared very much about the welfare and happiness of the people in her realm. The citizens were industrious, which made them, and their queen, quite happy, since people who are not industrious grow bored with life rather soon and are discontented. The people all worked at their jobs with enormous enthusiasm and dedication, and managed to build glass factories, banks, grain elevators and many other useful things. Some of them sold things to the others, like precious jewels, dry cleaning, shoes, clothing and video cassette recorders. All was well.

One day, however, the queen noticed that her subjects were dropping like flies. "Oh, no," she gasped in horror. "My beloved subjects are growing sick and dropping like flies. What shall I do?" She asked a person who had not yet succumbed what was the matter. "How do you feel?" she inquired.

"What? Oh, great, great...listen, I'd love to chat, but I've really got to run...I've got to make some sales calls before I go to the town council meeting, then tonight after my accounting class, my wife and I are planning to wallpaper the living room. But let's have lunch real soon...Got to runnnn...arrgghhhh...clunk" And, even as he spoke, yet another citizen fell to the ground and expired.

"Oh, dear," thought the queen, "This will never do. I know they are happy when they have plenty to do, but perhaps this one was too busy. I will make them relax more. Then they might live a bit longer." So she sent out a decree, proclaiming that work should only take place eight hours a day and the rest of the time should be given over to rest, sleep and eating.

After she made the proclamation, she was called away to a convention, so the new way of life became firmly established in her absence. When she returned, she was horrified to discover that her subjects were still dropping like flies, only now when they hit the ground, they no longer went clunk; the sound they made was more like whooooph. This was because they were quite rotund, and all the fat padded them nicely so they made a more quiet noise as they expired.

"What is wrong?" she quired one of the little round subjects. "Hmmm? Oh, yawn nothing. We just don't seem to have any sigh energy anymore," answered the chubby citizen. "It's all I can do to work three or four hours a day, eat my supper and fall into bed at 8:30. I seem so tired that I just can't seem tooooo...arghhh...whooooph". The demise of yet another subject before her very eyes troubled her quite a bit.

The queen set about traveling through the kingdom to see if she might find someone who seemed to be in good health, and she found that often the little children were quite healthy. She observed them closely, and noticed that, in addition to working at growing up, eating wholesome food, and getting enough rest, they also spent a part of each day running, jumping and otherwise cavorting. These activities she called "athletics" (because the word sounded so different from clunk and whooooph, both of which sounds distressed her so). She sent out another decree, stating that all citizens must spend a part of each day pursuing such activities as field hockey, soccer, baseball, softball, cross country and track, basketball, tennis and cheerleading. So that everyone could learn these activities, she proclaimed that they must be a part of everyone's education. So, on the following pages, you will see how well the citizens in one school perfected their athletic skills.

Learning Life Skills

long time ago, there was a wonderful school where many vital things were taught in many different subjects. This school gave the world useful citizens with good ideas and original thoughts. There are many schools in the world...so why were the students from this particular school so poised, confident and interesting??? It was because the students learned fascinating things, not just in school, but after school as well. All the pupils were encouraged to participate in special activities which made them more interesting and prepared for LIFE.

A particularly popular activity in this school was drama. In the study of drama, one is taught to 1) Speak Up. During performances, this skill is employed to make it difficult for members of the audience to fall asleep. It is useful in life, too, as it allows people to keep the volume up and prevent husbands/wives/children/employees/employers/pets/in-laws/plumbers/I.R.S. agents from falling asleep during monologues of explanation. One also learns from drama to 2) Move with Grace. This is valuable especially during weddings, particularly if one is the bride or groom. It is also a handy skill if one wishes appear polished. Bag Persons are generally considered awkward and clumsy. Another skill learned from drama is to 3) Emote. This helps when one wishes to make impassioned pleas, particularly when one's back is against the wall. Although the students of this school never found themselves really needing to emote, since their superior education kept them out of difficult situations, they could have used this ability to emote during a) court appearances, b) traffic citations, c) job interviews and d) while applying for credit.

Another activity popular at this school was Winterim. This prepared the students for entrance in the workaday world, while conveying to the students that much was expected of them. Seldom did the students serve their Winterim as apprentice counter boys at McDonalds. Instead, they studied careers in Dog Sledding, Art/Typesetting, Oceanography, Meteorology, Architecture, and other varied endeavors. This pursuit gave the students an inkling of the widely divergent skills required to run the world.

There was a chess team at this school, which taught the art of concentration and silent thought, a real asset to people who wish to remain absorbed and motionless over long periods of time, as in doctor's waiting rooms and board meetings.

In the field of publication, the students could participate in the production of the yearbook, called The Weathervane, and the paper, The Tomahawk. These activities were highly useful in teaching the students how to meet deadlines. The study of panic management is imperative for a successful life; any business owner, mother of a two-year-old or owner of a large dog will attest to this fact.

There were other activities at this splendid school as well, and if the gentle reader will turn the page, he/she will enjoy reading about them all.

A Practical Endeavor

...an Advertising Tale

Once upon a time, there was a small, but important school, full of interesting, handsome, memorable students and teachers. The students and a teacher or two thought that the small, but important, student body and faculty were so terribly interesting, handsome and memorable that perhaps a record should be made for future generations that all might see, in years to come, how splendid this school really was.

A variety of creative suggestions was made regarding the nature of the record to be produced. Someone thought perhaps the faculty and student body would be best preserved by casting them in bronze. This was an inventive suggestion, and certainly the record would be important and relatively permanent, but dreadfully costly. Also, the problem of where to place all of the heavy bronze statues seemed insurmountable. A large number of students objected to having their statues placed out of doors, as the elements would turn them green, not to mention the adverse effect pigeons might have upon them. And if placed indoors, of course, the statues would take up as much room as an entire school of living students, so that in a few short years, the school would be inhabited by inanimate students. Some faculty members said this probably would not differ much from the current situation, and that a wonderful degree of quiet would reign in the school, but because of the cost, this record-keeping idea was scrapped.

The next suggestion for preserving the student body and faculty for future generations was also impractical. It involved having everyone's faces carved into the sides of mountains, a la Mount Rushmore, but the cost of building the mountains was prohibitive; the school, you see, was situated in a locale so flat that the natives of the area were often forced to go skiing on expressway overpasses.

Then someone thought of producing a book...after all, the school library was full of them, so you can see that even duller witted students would eventually think of this. The book would be filled with photographs of the handsome students and faculty, and have interesting words written in it that would describe the school and the students and the faculty. This seemed to be a wonderful idea. It would be practical, because it would be not-too-costly, and many books could be printed so that everyone might have one. These could be passed around, so that meaningful messages could be written in them, like "To a swell kid with a great personality. Good luck always (especially with the boys). Have a great life. Love ya..." etc. Everyone agreed this was a grand idea, but still the cost per book would be too high — not as high as the cost per bronze statue or mountain, but still too high.

Then someone had a brilliant idea. If the school got someone else to pay for the most of the cost of the books, then the price per book would be low enough so that even the student who spent most of his money playing "Joust" and buying Duran Duran records would have enough left over to buy one. But, fascinating as the handsome, memorable school, students and faculty were, no one could think of anyone who would be interested enough in the whole project to pay for the entire thing.

"Advertising! We will sell advertising!" someone suggested wisely. So, as you will see when you turn the page, that is exactly what the small, but interesting, school did.

Rules for teachers

There were strict rules about what duties a teacher had to fulfill. A teacher was expected to behave properly at all times. Here are some rules that teachers had to obey in the year 1882.

1. Teachers will fill the lamps and clean the chimney each day.
2. Each teacher will bring a bucket of water and a scuttle of coal for the day's session.
3. Make your pens carefully. You may whittle nibs to the individual tastes of the pupils.
4. Men teachers may take one evening each week for courting purposes, or two evenings a week if they go to church regularly.
5. After ten hours in school, the teachers may spend the remaining time reading the Bible or other good books.
6. Women teachers who marry or engage in improper conduct will be dismissed.
7. Every teacher should lay aside from each day's pay a goodly sum of his earnings. He should use his savings during his retirement years so that he will not become a burden on society.
8. Any teacher who smokes, uses liquor in any form, visits pool halls or public halls, or gets shaved in a barber shop, will give good reasons for people to suspect his worth, intentions, and honesty.
9. The teacher who performs his labor faithfully and without fault for five years will be given an increase of twenty-five cents per week in his pay.

Rules for students

Good students in early schools were expected to earn more than high marks. There were many rules to follow and duties to perform. The schoolmaster really was the "master" of his pupils. Children were told to obey the master of the school even if obedience meant having to stand still while being strapped. Here are some rules for students.

1. Respect your schoolmaster. Obey him and accept his punishments.
2. Do not call your classmates names or fight with them. Love and help each other.
3. Never make noises or disturb your neighbors as they work.
4. Be silent during classes. Do not talk unless it is absolutely necessary.
5. Do not leave your seat without permission.
6. No more than one student at a time may go to the washroom.
7. At the end of the class, wash your hands and face. Wash your feet if they are bare.
8. Bring firewood into the classroom for the stove whenever the teacher tells you to.
9. Go quietly in and out of the classroom.
10. If the master calls your name after class, straighten the benches and tables. Sweep the room, dust, and leave everything tidy.

DEAR FRIENDS:

CONGRESSMAN DEL LATTA HAS TOLD ME OF YOUR CELEBRATION OF HERITAGE WEEK TO COMMEMORATE THE ONE HUNDREDTH ANNIVERSARY OF MAUMEE VALLEY COUNTRY DAY SCHOOL.

THIS IS A SPECIAL OCCASION FOR ALL OF YOU, AND I KNOW YOU ARE PROUD TO HAVE PASSED THE MILESTONE IN THE HISTORY OF YOUR SCHOOL. EDUCATION HAS PLAYED AN IMPORTANT ROLE IN THE DEVELOPMENT AND PROSPERITY OF AMERICA, AND IT IS MY HOPE THAT MAUMEE VALLEY COUNTRY DAY SCHOOL WILL CONTINUE TO PROVIDE FINE FACILITIES FOR THE EDUCATION OF STUDENTS IN THE AREA. NANCY JOINS ME IN WISHING YOU AN ENJOYABLE WEEK AND, AGAIN, CONGRATULATIONS.

SINCERELY, RONALD REAGAN

OWED TO PETER

(To the tune of She'll be comin' round the mountain — what else!)

Oh his name is Peter Stevens as we know;
He's the guy who loves ice, sleet and snow;
When the other schools were closing,
He was in bed dozing,
He's the man who kept us on the go.

Oh last Monday is the day we'll neer forget;
All the kids remind us of that yet;
When the snow flakes start a flying,
They all break out a crying,
Has Mr. Stevens learned his lesson yet?

So the next time that the wind and snow do blow,
You-oo all to your radios should go;
And then cross your toes and fingers,
And hope that memory lingers,
So that day at school we need not show.

Now ol' Peter is an honorable man;
Devoted to his job and that's no scam;
He always is a hopin'
To keep old M.V. open,
Despite the forecast of the weatherman!
